Samuel Longhorne Clemens, alias Mark Twain, is regarded by many as America's greatest writer. Ernest Hemmingway said all American writing begins with Huckleberry Finn. Twain's talents made him the greatest global American celebrity of his time. But beyond the witty turns of phrase and social critique, there was a man who drank and gambled too much, who went bankrupt, who could be viciously mean, and was a deserter from the confederate army. So who was the real Mark Twain?

The three-part series THE WRITING CODE examines the origin, history and craft of writing -- as both an art form and a science. Filmed in the U.S., England, Egypt, India and Iran, the programs explore writing systems from ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics to the Internet. The programs discuss literacy and the alphabet, and delve into how writing was first invented, how children learn to read and write, how Chinese writing works and what "digital" means. The series makes three major points: writing had to be invented; writing is different from speaking; and writing is the most important technology in human history.

Format: Documentary

This is a quintessentially Midwestern story of an unassuming, self-doubting man who, through expressing his unique view of the world, redefined the comic art form. His genius lay in depicting the daily collisions of insiders and outsiders, of mundane cruelties and transcendent hopes - seeing the extraordinary in the ordinary. The "Peanuts" cast of characters is as familiar to us as our own siblings; their trials and tribulations speak of our families and evoke our childhood desperations. They are portrayed with whimsy and poignancy - and always with love and tolerance, each representing different facets of Schulz' personality and his perspectives on 20th-century America.

The premiere hour features four distinctly different artists whose works pose questions about the role of emotion, regret, fantasy and nostalgia in contemporary art. Laurie Simmons' first feature film, The Music of Regret, gave her an opportunity to bring her photography to life. Staging scenes with puppets, ventriloquist dummies and dancers costumed as everyday objects (a book, a clock, a cake), Simmons creates a nostalgic world that explores the sentiments of love and romance among family and neighbors. Lari Pittman draws inspiration from a childhood that allowed him to be creative and imaginative, as well as from an acute awareness of our country's attitude toward the gay community. His meticulously layered paintings transform decoration, pattern and signage into elaborate scenes that sweep viewers away with their dizzying complexity. Sculptor Judy Pfaff designed an exhibition around the sadness and loss she experienced following the deaths of several of her closest friends and family members. Balancing intense planning with improvisational decision-making on site, Pfaff creates a sprawling sculptural installation that explores the worlds of black and white and blends landscape and architecture into an organic whole. Pierre Huyghe uses various forms of expression to create new worlds and investigate the circulation of stories. His films, installations and public projects closely examine culture and boundaries and use playfulness and humor as a way to address complex social topics. From an expedition in Antarctica to a small-town parade, Huyghe thrives on the production and documentation of new and scripted realities.

America in the 1960s and 70s was in turmoil. The civil rights struggle, the war in Vietnam and the sexual revolution defined a nation in conflict. But at 10 o'clock every Saturday night, in dorms and dens, in living rooms and bedrooms across the country, Americans watched "The Carol Burnett Show." For 11 years, the wacky performer yelled like Tarzan and won - and sometimes broke - our hearts with her edgy, always sympathetic, characters. She could fall down a flight of stairs or hold her own in a duet with Julie Andrews. Yet, as with so many brilliant comedians, hers was a difficult childhood. A glimpse of something deeper and darker began to emerge in the dramatic career that followed her TV variety show.

The second installment examines the ways in which four artists use their work to picture war, express outrage and empathize with the suffering of others. Politics and the brutality of war underscore many of Nancy Spero's paintings. A pioneer of feminist art, she creates easily read yet complicated work that makes an unapologetic statement against, and generates discussion about, the abuse of power, privilege and male dominance. Landscape photographer An-My Lê's black-and-white images examine the impact, representation and meaning of war, as well as the relationship between military activity and the surrounding terrain. Lê draws on her own childhood experience as a refugee of the Vietnam War to capture compelling photographs reflecting current American involvement in the Middle East. Basing his work on research, reflection and response to horrific events, Alfredo Jaar's installations, films and community-based projects communicate a specific experience to his audience, capturing beauty but also confronting horror. Jaar identifies the gap between reality and its representation, and his work explores the limits of art to accurately represent tragic world events, from genocide to poverty and famine. Jenny Holzer, well-known for her subversive use of text and poetry, focuses on cruelty, devastation, consumerist impulses, death and disease in order to provoke a critical response from the viewer. Whether in an installation of declassified war documents or a large-scale projection of text from provocative essays, Holzer presents words in ways that are overwhelming, exacting and illustrate the power of language to harm or heal, expose or conceal.

This program introduces viewers to four artists whose works pose questions about the relationships between nature and culture. Ursula von Rydingsvard works primarily with cedar to create large-scale structures. Drawing from her childhood memories of growing up in WWII Polish refugee camps, she creates massive wooden sculptures, which often resemble bowls, tools and walls, and echo the raw, wooden barracks in which her family was forced to live. Iñigo Manglano-Ovalle's technologically sophisticated sculptures and video installations employ natural forms such as clouds and icebergs, as well as objects including an umbrella and bullfight ring, as metaphors for understanding difficult social issues, from immigration and gun violence to human cloning. For photographer Robert Adams, inspiration comes from the American West. Through his compelling black-and-white images, he documents scenes and landscapes - from a stripped forest to a sprawling suburban neighborhood - that are beautiful yet disturbing and strike a balance between sober documentation and somber indignation. Mark Dion lives amongst "the world of stuff," collecting materials from flea markets and yard sales for his installations and public projects - many of which explore our ideas and assumptions about nature. Inspired and intrigued by scientists, natural history museums and laboratory procedures, Dion's works include an elaborate vivarium in Seattle for which he constructed a greenhouse to protect and keep alive a fallen tree and its surroundings - a tribute to and appreciation for the complexities of our natural system.

Irving Berlin pulled himself up from poverty on New York's Lower East Side to become America's most famous and enduring songwriter. Born Israel Baline in Belarus, then part of the Russian empire, on May 11, 1888, he immigrated with his family to America at age five and later taught himself rudimentary piano while working as a singing waiter in a bar and brothel in New York's Chinatown. By age twenty-three, he was the wunderkind of Tin Pan Alley with more than two hundred hit songs and hundreds more to come--songs like "White Christmas," "Easter Parade," and "God Bless America." Who was Irving Berlin, and what does his music say about America?

This week Think Tank with Ben Wattenberg takes a look at "Irving Berlin's America," Part Two of a two-part show. From Ragtime to Swing and from Broadway to Hollywood, Irving Berlin's music defined American songwriting for more than half a century. Songs like "God Bless America," "There's No Business Like Show Business," "Cheek to Cheek," and "White Christmas." Fully half of his eight hundred and ninety-nine published tunes went on to become hits. Two hundred and eighty-two reached the top ten on the popular charts; thirty-five went to number one. Berlin's music reflects an almost instinctive understanding of the culture and the early events of what has been called the American century. His songs capture the heart of small town America and the brass of Broadway. Who was Irving Berlin? What is there about his music that still stirs and unites Americans? To find out, Think Tank is joined by Linda Emmet, the second of Irving Berlin's three daughters, and music historian Robert Kimball, co-editors of the just-published book, "The Complete Lyrics of Irving Berlin," and Philip Furia, professor at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and author of "Irving Berlin, a Life in Song."

In the late 1950s, a shy Chicago accountant who was trying to pick up some extra cash began doing local radio sketches. By 1960, The Button-Down Mind - recorded before he even stepped onto the stand-up circuit - hit gold as Album of the Year and won a Grammy for Best New Artist. Engaging the average guy in all of us, Bland Bob's deadpan and mildly nervous humor, exemplified in "The Driving Instructor," helped spearhead the explosion in American comedy - at clubs, on records and television variety shows - and by permanently pushing the boundaries of the sitcom genre. "The Bob Newhart Show" and, later, "Newhart," portraying the quintessential sane man caught in a world of zany characters gone mad, were among the most popular viewing staples throughout the 70s and 80s. Newhart still performs up to 40 stand-up dates a year and was recognized with a 2004 Emmy nomination for his first dramatic role on "ER." With a legacy particularly familiar today in the routines of Jerry Seinfeld and Ellen DeGeneres, his appeal was always seminal: Richard Pryor once bragged, "The first album I ever stole was Bob Newhart's!"

We have always had a deep sense of longing for the handmade. Perhaps because each of us, in our own way, has had a craft experience. Sometimes it's an object passed down to us, or one that crosses our path, and connects us to others in traditions, heritage and rituals. You've begun your understanding and appreciation with our TV series. Now go further with the other elements of this comprehensive journey. COMMUNITY - Community carries with it many meanings in the world of craft. It is manifest in the social traditions passed from generation to generation. Or in a literal community of people, bound by geography or skill or place in time that comes together on a project, or to help one another. It is the give and take of academic communities where knowledge is exposed.

For over 40 years, Tom Wolfe has challenged the way Americans look at themselves. From hippies to heroes, his funny and insightful writing has explored the cultural landscape. His unconventional style, mixing literary techniques with factual reporting, became known as new journalism. He has written a series of brilliant best-selling novels. THINK TANK caught up with Tom Wolfe at the tenth anniversary celebration of the Derriere Guard. The Derriere Guard is a loose association of like people in various arts, "it's all of us who are at the cutting edge but are doing art that is traditionally based" says composer Stefania De Kenessy, the founding member. Tom Wolfe was drawn to the group's critique of hyper modernist art and became an enthusiastic supporter, so much so that he delivered their first keynote address in 1997 and returned to do it again a decade later. After his speech, we sat down with Wolfe to find out about the Derriere Garde, the art establishment and the politics of writing.

The Post Register published the "Scouts' Honor" series in early 2005, and the paper immediately came under fire from some in the community. The fallout of the stories ended up being far more dramatic than anyone had anticipated. A prominent local company took out full-page ads in the paper challenging the reporting and claiming, "the Post Register's real intent was to smear the Scout's good name and take away what the Scouts value most, their honor." Additional victims came forward to tell their stories of abuse. And one father, motivated by his sons' accounts of abuse, dedicated himself full-time to changing Idaho's statute of limitations in cases involving the sexual abuse of minors.

With Washington stuck in place on illegal immigration policy, local governments are taking the matter into their own hands, shifting the cultural and political battleground from Pennsylvania Avenue to Main Street, USA. On Friday, October 19 at 8:30 pm (check local listings), NOW catches up with two New Jersey mayors who have sharply different - and politically surprising - approaches to dealing with undocumented immigrants in their communities. Morristown mayor Don Cresitello, a Democrat, wants to invoke a Department of Homeland Security provision that would grant his police department federal enforcement powers in dealing with illegal immigrants. "They shouldn't be here, and we shouldn't be spending that money on a population that's not supposed to be in this country," Mayor Cresitello tells NOW. An hour away, Hightstown mayor Bob Patten has turned his little town into a "Sanctuary City" - a place where law-abiding illegal immigrants are protected and embraced. "We don't ask people what their immigration status is now," says Mayor Patten. "We simply want to treat everybody justly, fairly. There's a due process." NOW's David Brancaccio visits the mayors and members of their immigrant communities to uncover the impact these measures are having, and the passions that fuel them.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." One of the latest battles in the war over evolution took place in a tiny town of Dover in eastern Pennsylvania. In 2004, the local school board ordered science teachers to read to their high school biology students a statement that suggested there is an alternative to Darwin's theory of evolution. Called Intelligent Design, the idea is that that life is too complex to have evolved naturally and therefore had to have been designed by an intelligent agent. The science teachers refused to comply with the order; alarmed parents filed a lawsuit in federal court accusing the school board of violating the separation of church and state. Suddenly, the small town of Dover was torn apart by controversy, pitting neighbor against neighbor. NOVA captures the emotional conflict in interviews with the townspeople, scientists and lawyers who participated in the historic six-week trial, Kitzmiller, et. al. v. Dover School District, et. al., which was closely watched by the world's media. With re-creations based on court transcripts, NOVA presents the arguments by lawyers and expert witnesses in riveting detail and provides an eye-opening crash course on questions such as "What is evolution?" and "Does Intelligent Design qualify as science?" For years to come, the lessons from Dover will continue to have a profound impact on how science is viewed in our society and how it's taught it in the classroom.

NOW shines a bright light on the scandalous connection between VECO Corporation, an Alaska-based oil services company and Alaska's old-boy Republican network. Two state legislators have been convicted in Federal court for accepting bribes from VECO. The FBI has video and audio evidence that reveal VECO executives shockingly handing out cash to those legislators in exchange for promises to roll back a tax on the oil industry. But that may only be the tip of the oily iceberg. NOW's Maria Hinojosa learns that several more lawmakers are being eyed in the growing scandal, including one of the country's most powerful politicians, Alaska U.S. Senator Ted Stevens. NOW investigates the bribes, the connections to Big Oil and the payoffs to obtain friendly tax policies.

Can an unlikely collaboration save Idaho's wilderness? A Republican congressman and the Idaho Conservation League have joined forces to protect a vast swath of the state's natural environment. The legislation, the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act (CIEDRA), transfers some public land -- land Americans across the country pay for -- to private local ownership in exchange for protection of nearby wilderness. It also leaves land bordering the wilderness open to further recreational use, especially involving off-road vehicles. That price is too high for some, including singer-songwriter Carole King, who owns a 128-acre ranch in Idaho. NOW talks to residents, ranchers, off-road vehicle fans, and wilderness advocates to unearth the truth behind a tug-of-war that is playing out not just in Idaho, but in other states and the halls of the U.S. Congress

"49 Up" premieres on "POV" October 9. Also on the show, "Off the Grid," a visit to Decorah, Iowa, where several families are going above and beyond the energy conservation call of duty by going off the electricity grid and producing their own power from renewable sources. They've given up some amenities, like air conditioning, but they haven't given up everything. Even more families who remain connected to the grid use Iowa's net metering laws to sell the extra energy they generate back to their utility company. Do they have the power to make it last?

A demographic change is affecting all Americans wherever they work and live: the rise of the flexible workforce. The global economy, increasing numbers of two-income families and the need for businesses to retain talent both in the executive suite and among low-paid workers are all having an impact on the way we work. This documentary, hosted by Bonnie Erbe, explores the latest innovations in workplace flexibility.

Why nothing is as it seems, not in presidential politics, not in Pakistan, and not with the economy, tonight on "Washington Week." Gov. Mitt Romney said, "I don't think the Republican Party is going to choose a pro-choice, pro-gay civil union candidate to lead our party." Oh, yes? Don't tell that to Pat Robertson. Pat Robertson said, "To me the overriding issue before the American people is the defense of our population from the bloodlust of Islamic terrorists." But Republican frontrunner Rudy Giuliani has New York baggage and other candidates like John McCain aren't giving up just yet. Sen. Sam Brownback said, "I'm here today to endorse the best pro-life candidate to beat Hillary Clinton." For the Democrats tonight, it's all about Iowa. Will one of them break out of the pack in the nation's first voting state? In Washington, President Bush and Congress try to assert control over a slippery ally, as Pakistan's government crackdown enters its second week. And follow the bouncing ball: oil prices, housing woes, and an unpredictable stock market. Are we headed toward recession? Covering the week: Gloria Borger of CNN and U.S. News and World Report, Dan Balz of the "Washington Post," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, and David Wessel, of the "Wall Street Journal."

This week, NOW travels to North Minneapolis to investigate the mortgage meltdown that has left the city scarred with boarded-up and abandoned houses. What's happened in communities like this one has investors everywhere shaken. Wall Street firms are stumbling and markets around the globe are nervous. Economists worry the mortgage bust may lead to a recession. NOW connects the dots to see the extent to which recklessness, corruption and greed created this subprime mess that now threatens to undermine our entire economy. David Brancaccio talks to Rep. Keith Ellison, who grew up in North Minneapolis and who has pushed legislation to address the crisis. He also talks to Ameriquest whistleblower Mark Bomchill, who explains the competitive "boiler room" culture that encouraged brokers to aggressively push mortgage products they knew clients would be unable to repay.

In the midst of the holiday spending and consumption frenzy, Bill Moyers interviews author Benjamin Barber about how capitalism isn't living up to its potential to serve society. "Capitalism is no longer manufacturing goods to meet real needs and human wants," says Barber. "It's manufacturing needs to sell us all the goods it's got to produce." Barber is the author of 17 books including international best-seller Jihad vs. McWorld and Consumed: How Markets Corrupt Children, Infantilize Adults, and Swallow Citizens Whole. Also on the program: is it time to rewrite the Constitution? Moyers gets perspective from the University of Texas Law School's Sanford Levinson, author of Our Undemocratic Constitution: Where the Constitution Goes Wrong (and How We the People Can Correct It). And an update on changes to media regulations voted on this week by the FCC.

The week in review, the year in review tonight on "Washington Week."
Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY) said, "I never believe any election is at all predictable, let alone inevitable." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "When I was 20 points down, they all thought I was a wonderful guy, so obviously things have changed." Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) said, "Let me just say something for the record: none of the Democratic candidates asked for my support. John McCain did." Pres. George W. Bush said, "I believe we will keep the White House. I believe ours is the party that understands the nature of the world in which we live and that the government's primary responsibility is to protect the American citizens from harm." Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-KY) said, "Even those of us who disagreed on the war have always agreed on at least one thing, and that is that the troops in the field will not be left without the resources they need." Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-MA) said, "It's wrong to give the president another huge blank check for the war in Iraq. Enough is enough. Enough is enough. Enough." Mitt Romney said, "The more people come to know Mike Huckabee, the more they realize they don't know about Mike Huckabee." Mike Huckabee said, "If we are so politically correct in this country that a person can't say enough of the nonsense of political attack ads, could we pause for a few days to say Merry Christmas to each other, then we're really, really in trouble as a country." And that's just what the nation's newsmakers had to say this week. Tonight we take a look at the last seven days and the last 12 months. Elections, the rocky economy, battles at home and abroad, with Jeanne Cummings of Politico, Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times, and Alexis Simendinger of National Journal, plus the observations of our "Washington Week" panelists on the big stories of 2007.

Voices From Baghdad explores what happened when teens in Baghdad met with their peers in Bloomfield, Connecticut via videoconference just before the war began. During this live face-to-face interaction the students discussed their similarities and differences, and U.S. teens learned about the Iraqi teens culture and daily lives, going into their homes and schools. In the process, many stereotypes are dispelled. The teens spoke about what it is like to be a teen in the present day and their hopes for the future. We also meet the same teens in early June to see how their lives and plans have changed.

There's no question teens are overweight and don't get enough exercise. In this program, teen reporters point out the current and future dangers of an unhealthy lifestyle, such as heart disease, cancer and type 2 diabetes. To help viewers make smart choices, they give easy to use information about reading labels to check the fat and sugar in food; ways to exercise at home; how to change family habits; and much more. They also visit a school that makes nutrition and fitness part of the curriculum; and a Boys & Girls Club where middle school teens learn nutrition basics and fun activities. Through humor, surprising facts and compelling personal stories, teens and parents see how they can also gain more energy and self-esteem through a healthy lifestyle.

One of the latest battles in the war over evolution took place in a tiny town of Dover in eastern Pennsylvania. In 2004, the local school board ordered science teachers to read to their high school biology students a statement that suggested there is an alternative to Darwin's theory of evolution. Called Intelligent Design, the idea is that that life is too complex to have evolved naturally and therefore had to have been designed by an intelligent agent. The science teachers refused to comply with the order; alarmed parents filed a lawsuit in federal court accusing the school board of violating the separation of church and state. Suddenly, the small town of Dover was torn apart by controversy, pitting neighbor against neighbor. NOVA captures the emotional conflict in interviews with the townspeople, scientists and lawyers who participated in the historic six-week trial, Kitzmiller, et. al. v. Dover School District, et. al., which was closely watched by the world's media. With re-creations based on court transcripts, NOVA presents the arguments by lawyers and expert witnesses in riveting detail and provides an eye-opening crash course on questions such as "What is evolution?" and "Does Intelligent Design qualify as science?" For years to come, the lessons from Dover will continue to have a profound impact on how science is viewed in our society and how it's taught it in the classroom.

Since the 1960s, the American university has often been less a free marketplace of ideas than a combat zone where partisan groups forcefully and sometimes fiercely argue their positions on national and world affairs. In recent years, no issue has been more contentious than the conflict in the Middle East. "Campus Battleground," a special in the AMERICA AT A CROSSROADS series, focuses on the University of California-Berkeley and Columbia University in New York, where pro-Israel and pro-Palestinian students struggle over the competing claims of Zionism and Palestinian nationalism, over what history teaches and whether absolute demands can ever lead to honorable compromise. The seemingly intractable conflict half a world away has forced these students to think about allegiances to family, ethnicity and religion and, above all, about the need to take a stand that will define them and their ideals.

What makes a school worth going to? Four youth media teams set out to answer this important question. Working in collaboration with producers from Learning Matters, a documentary production company that focuses on youth and learning, the youth production teams created short personal documentaries that present authentic youth perspectives about their schools. Thomas, in Espanola, NM, does poorly in academic subjects until, in a school arts program, he discovers previously unrecognized skills and gains the confidence to tackle more academic subjects. In Evanston, IL, students discover that excellent teaching requires a mixture of inspiring pedagogy, emotional coaching and a strong dose of personalized attention. Students in San Antonio highlight a magnet school with only 450 students, teachers and administrators. Finally, Perpich Center for Arts Education emerges as a beacon of progress, peace and purpose as it provides academic and personal security for students in Minnesota. These pieces depict an academic and creative road trip throughout the American public school system showing signs of hope and success. Students ultimately turn the camera on themselves and provide a blueprint for improving educational experiences for their peers.

The series then moves to China, whose soaring population and rapid industrialization have created a boom in urbanization that is unprecedented in human history. In an attempt to tackle this global issue, "China: From Red to Green?" explores design solutions in both theory and practice, including Steven Holl's Linked Hybrid Project, which when completed will be the largest residential, geothermal heating/cooling and greywater recycling system in the world. Also featured in this episode is architect, designer and winner of three U.S. Presidential Awards, William McDonough. Recognized by Time Magazine as "Hero of the Planet," McDonough talks about his innovative plans to make China an entirely sustainable country and how it will demonstrate the ways architecture can be both profitable and environmentally intelligent.

This program introduces viewers to four artists whose works pose questions about the relationships between nature and culture. Ursula von Rydingsvard works primarily with cedar to create large-scale structures. Drawing from her childhood memories of growing up in WWII Polish refugee camps, she creates massive wooden sculptures, which often resemble bowls, tools and walls, and echo the raw, wooden barracks in which her family was forced to live. Iñigo Manglano-Ovalle's technologically sophisticated sculptures and video installations employ natural forms such as clouds and icebergs, as well as objects including an umbrella and bullfight ring, as metaphors for understanding difficult social issues, from immigration and gun violence to human cloning. For photographer Robert Adams, inspiration comes from the American West. Through his compelling black-and-white images, he documents scenes and landscapes - from a stripped forest to a sprawling suburban neighborhood - that are beautiful yet disturbing and strike a balance between sober documentation and somber indignation. Mark Dion lives amongst "the world of stuff," collecting materials from flea markets and yard sales for his installations and public projects - many of which explore our ideas and assumptions about nature. Inspired and intrigued by scientists, natural history museums and laboratory procedures, Dion's works include an elaborate vivarium in Seattle for which he constructed a greenhouse to protect and keep alive a fallen tree and its surroundings - a tribute to and appreciation for the complexities of our natural system.

As the first wolves reintroduced into Yellowstone, the Druids are the most celebrated wolf pack in North America. Pioneers in the wilderness, they were at the heart of a massive scientific experiment to restore an entire ecosystem that began to break down without its wolves. Emmy Award-winning filmmaker Bob Landis spent more than three years with the these remarkable wolves, creating a spectacularly dramatic and intimate record of their lives, their great battles with rival wolf packs and the changing fortunes of the coyotes and foxes who share their home range in Yellowstone's beautiful Lamar Valley. Filmed in high definition.

When the federal government ended its 60-plus years of price support to tobacco farmers in 2004, Virginians were hit particularly hard. NOW travels to the mountainous farmlands of Appalachia to meet farmers who've attempted the difficult switch from tobacco to increasingly popular organic produce. Among those profiled is restaurant owner Steven Hopp who, along with his wife -- acclaimed author Barbara Kingsolver -- spent a year living off the land. Social entrepreneur Anthony Flaccavento founded an Enterprising Idea called "Appalachian Sustainable Development" to help local farmers and markets make the transition not just to organic, but to local organic. Can local farmers change course and crops and still survive in a shifting economy? Also on the show, David Brancaccio interviews prominent environmentalist Bill McKibben about his "National Day of Climate Action" on November 3, and what we can all do to fight global warming.

Can an unlikely collaboration save Idaho's wilderness? A Republican congressman and the Idaho Conservation League have joined forces to protect a vast swath of the state's natural environment. The legislation, the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act (CIEDRA), transfers some public land -- land Americans across the country pay for -- to private local ownership in exchange for protection of nearby wilderness. It also leaves land bordering the wilderness open to further recreational use, especially involving off-road vehicles. That price is too high for some, including singer-songwriter Carole King, who owns a 128-acre ranch in Idaho. NOW talks to residents, ranchers, off-road vehicle fans, and wilderness advocates to unearth the truth behind a tug-of-war that is playing out not just in Idaho, but in other states and the halls of the U.S. Congress.

The long and winding campaign road: vetoing healthcare, controlling the contractors, and Justice Thomas speaks, tonight on "Washington Week." Rudy Giuliani [Former Mayor of New York] said, "I think we'll end up where we have very good quarter, probably one of the best of the Republicans." Rudy Giuliani was right, but not by much. The Republican presidential race is scrambled while the Democratic race is hardening. We take a look. The politics of children's healthcare: why the president vetoed a controversial bill. President George W. Bush stated, "Poor kids first." And why even some Republicans don't agree with him. Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) said, "I think he's been given some pretty bad advice." The Blackwater brouhaha: who controls the contractors? Sen. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY), said, "Well, in America, if you committed a crime you don't pack them up and ship them out of the country in two days." The silent justice speaks: Clarence Thomas' surprising new memoir. Plus, what was this man thinking? On November 28, 2005, California Representative Randy "Duke" Cunningham resigned from office after pleading guilty to taking more than $2.4 million in bribes from defense contractors seeking government contracts. The story of Cunningham's downfall -- from legendary Vietnam War ace pilot to federal inmate -- was publicly credited by the U.S. District Attorney's Office to the Pulitzer Prize-winning team of reporters from Copley News Service and The San Diego Union-Tribune. Starting with the story of Cunningham's suspicious house sale to defense contractor Mitchell Wade and using court records, Congressional travel databases, confidential sources, and even scans of a high school yearbook, the reporting team uncovered the murky side of Washington politics that continues to make headlines today. Exposé follows the reporters' trail and talks to their sources about the way the contract game is played in Washington and how willing lawmakers are to play it.

I'm Alexis Simendinger sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." President George W. Bush said, "I'm going to sprint to the finish and finish this job strong. That's one way to ensure that I am relevant." A feisty commander-in-chief shows he's ready to keep fighting, while Democrats regroup after yet another setback against the president on children's health care. Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) stated, "The president just doesn't get it." Politics and policy come to a head in Washington. While on the international front, Vladimir Putin flexes his muscles and distances himself from the U.S. on issues like Iran and democratic reforms in Russia. Is there some soul searching going on between these two leaders? And on the campaign trail, the watch word of the week among Republicans - Gov. Mitt Romney stated, "I have conservative values." Rudy Giuliani said, "I run the most conservative government." Fred Thompson said, "I've been a consistent conservative." Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "Twenty-four years as a conservative Republican." Wrestling over résumés and who will carry on the conservative mantle. Covering these stories this week, Peter Baker of "The Washington Post," Karen Tumulty of "Time" magazine, James Kitfield of "National Journal," and John Dickerson of "Slate" magazine.

Is war with Iran now more likely? New controls over private guards in Iraq, answering the California fire alarm, and what do the voters really want anyway? I'm Pete Williams sitting in for Gwen Ifill tonight on "Washington Week." Raising the stakes in the Middle East. The Bush administration comes up with new ways to punish Iran, but could they make military action more likely? Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said, "We are taking additional steps to combat Iran's dangerous conduct." In Iraq new pressure on the hired guns. Rep. Sarbanes (D-MD.) stated, "I'm curious to know whether you regret the failures of the department." Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "I certainly regret that we did not have the kind of oversight that I would have insisted upon." Out West, raging wildfires forced the largest evacuation in California history. How did the federal government measure up this time? President George W. Bush said, "We're not going to forget you in Washington, D.C." But who really made the difference? Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger said, "From the 2003 fire we have learned a lot." And what do the voters care about? Are their priorities getting lost in campaign '08? Plus, some exciting news about what's ahead for "Washington Week." Covering these stories tonight, Helene Cooper of the "New York Times," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Spencer Hsu of the "Washington Post," and Doyle McManus of the "Los Angeles Times."

When the federal government ended its 60-plus years of price support to tobacco farmers in 2004, Virginians were hit particularly hard. NOW travels to the mountainous farmlands of Appalachia to meet farmers who've attempted the difficult switch from tobacco to increasingly popular organic produce. Among those profiled is restaurant owner Steven Hopp who, along with his wife -- acclaimed author Barbara Kingsolver -- spent a year living off the land. Social entrepreneur Anthony Flaccavento founded an Enterprising Idea called "Appalachian Sustainable Development" to help local farmers and markets make the transition not just to organic, but to local organic. Can local farmers change course and crops and still survive in a shifting economy? Also on the show, David Brancaccio interviews prominent environmentalist Bill McKibben about his "National Day of Climate Action" on November 3, and what we can all do to fight global warming.

NOW investigates the latest Congressional maneuvers to determine the fate of a children's health care program. The State Children's Health Insurance Program, or SCHIP, is a block grant from the federal government to cover children whose family incomes exceed that which would make them eligible for Medicaid, but are too low to afford private insurance. But the fund is quickly running out of money. President Bush vetoed a bipartisan SCHIP reauthorization bill on October 3, claiming it would attract recipients who could otherwise afford private insurance. Now, the issue has become a political free-for-all, with family lives hanging in the balance. As part of its investigation, NOW interviewed Graeme Frost and his parents. Graeme is a twelve year-old boy whose family has been using SCHIP to pay for his medical expenses following a car accident. After Frost told his story as part of the Democratic weekly radio address at the end of September, he and his family became the targets of right wing attacks. Many are now asking: Did Congressional Republicans assist in a smear campaign?

In 60 days, the people of Iowa vote. In one year, the entire nation gets a chance to pick a new president. The campaign is heating up, and we're taking it to the streets right here in St. Louis for the first in a series of election-year specials, tonight on "Washington Week." It's crunch time and no one knows that better than the 15 men and one woman running for president. But the window is closing fast. Fred Thompson said, "The preseason is over. Let's get on with it. Sen. Hillary Clinton said, "If you want a winner who knows how to take them on, I'm your girl." Rudy Giuliani said, "We're going to need you in 2008 to save us from Hillary Clinton." Sen. Barack Obama stated, "The next president has to be able to get people to work together to get things done, even when they disagree." Gov. Mitt Romney said, "The values that I have are the same values you'll find in faiths across this country." Sen. John Edwards said, "We need to give the power in America back to you and back to working men and women all across this country." Sen. John McCain said, "As soon as people start focusing on the race, we're going to win the nomination." How is this campaign coming together outside the Beltway, and which of these candidates is best positioned? By February, who will still be standing? We'll ask the reporters who've been covering developments in and out of Washington: James Barnes of "National Journal," Jeanne Cummings of "Politico," Michael Duffy of "Time" magazine, and John Dickerson of "Slate" magazine.

Why nothing is as it seems, not in presidential politics, not in Pakistan, and not with the economy, tonight on "Washington Week." Gov. Mitt Romney said, "I don't think the Republican Party is going to choose a pro-choice, pro-gay civil union candidate to lead our party." Oh, yes? Don't tell that to Pat Robertson. Pat Robertson said, "To me the overriding issue before the American people is the defense of our population from the bloodlust of Islamic terrorists." But Republican frontrunner Rudy Giuliani has New York baggage and other candidates like John McCain aren't giving up just yet. Sen. Sam Brownback said, "I'm here today to endorse the best pro-life candidate to beat Hillary Clinton." For the Democrats tonight, it's all about Iowa. Will one of them break out of the pack in the nation's first voting state? In Washington, President Bush and Congress try to assert control over a slippery ally, as Pakistan's government crackdown enters its second week. And follow the bouncing ball: oil prices, housing woes, and an unpredictable stock market. Are we headed toward recession? Covering the week: Gloria Borger of CNN and U.S. News and World Report, Dan Balz of the "Washington Post," Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, and David Wessel, of the "Wall Street Journal."

Since the 1960s, the American university has often been less a free marketplace of ideas than a combat zone where partisan groups forcefully and sometimes fiercely argue their positions on national and world affairs. In recent years, no issue has been more contentious than the conflict in the Middle East. "Campus Battleground," a special in the AMERICA AT A CROSSROADS series, focuses on the University of California-Berkeley and Columbia University in New York, where pro-Israel and pro-Palestinian students struggle over the competing claims of Zionism and Palestinian nationalism, over what history teaches and whether absolute demands can ever lead to honorable compromise. The seemingly intractable conflict half a world away has forced these students to think about allegiances to family, ethnicity and religion and, above all, about the need to take a stand that will define them and their ideals.

On November 28, 2005, California Representative Randy "Duke" Cunningham resigned from office after pleading guilty to taking more than $2.4 million in bribes from defense contractors seeking government contracts. The story of Cunningham's downfall -- from legendary Vietnam War ace pilot to federal inmate -- was publicly credited by the U.S. District Attorney's Office to the Pulitzer Prize-winning team of reporters from Copley News Service and The San Diego Union-Tribune. Starting with the story of Cunningham's suspicious house sale to defense contractor Mitchell Wade and using court records, Congressional travel databases, confidential sources, and even scans of a high school yearbook, the reporting team uncovered the murky side of Washington politics that continues to make headlines today. Exposé follows the reporters' trail and talks to their sources about the way the contract game is played in Washington and how willing lawmakers are to play it.

9/11 has indelibly altered America in ways that people are now starting to earnestly question: not only perpetual orange alerts, barricades and body frisks at the airport, but greater government scrutiny of people's records and electronic surveillance of their communications. The watershed, officials tell FRONTLINE, was the government's shift after 9/11 to a strategy of pre-emption at home -- not just prosecuting terrorists for breaking the law, but trying to find and stop them before they strike.

This week, NOW travels to North Minneapolis to investigate the mortgage meltdown that has left the city scarred with boarded-up and abandoned houses. What's happened in communities like this one has investors everywhere shaken. Wall Street firms are stumbling and markets around the globe are nervous. Economists worry the mortgage bust may lead to a recession. NOW connects the dots to see the extent to which recklessness, corruption and greed created this subprime mess that now threatens to undermine our entire economy. David Brancaccio talks to Rep. Keith Ellison, who grew up in North Minneapolis and who has pushed legislation to address the crisis. He also talks to Ameriquest whistleblower Mark Bomchill, who explains the competitive "boiler room" culture that encouraged brokers to aggressively push mortgage products they knew clients would be unable to repay.

If you think nobody's talking about issues, you weren't paying attention this week. We're all over it tonight on "Washington Week." Sen. Barack Obama said, "What the American people are looking for right now is straight answers to tough questions, and that is not what we've seen out of Senator Clinton." Sen. John Edwards said, "When the crucial vote came on stopping Bush, Cheney and the neocons on Iran, she voted with Bush and Cheney." Sen. Hillary Clinton said, "I don't mind taking hits on my record, on issues, but when somebody starts throwing mud, at least we can hope that it's both accurate and not right out of the Republican playbook." Sen. Chris Dodd said, "There's a shrillness to the debate. The American people want results." The debate may have been shrill at times, but the candidates were actually debating policy: from Social Security to Pakistan, to education, to human rights. We look at the impact. With stakes just as high on the Republican side, GOP candidates are focusing on Immigration.

You were thinking maybe a quiet holiday week? Not a chance. We'll tell you why tonight on "Washington Week." The three branches of government on overdrive. At the White House good news on Iraq: the violence in down, but Democrats in Congress are not mollified. Rep. John Murtha (D-PA) said, "Because the Pentagon says it you believe it? You believe what the Pentagon says?" And the president's not too happy with Congress either. Pres. George W. Bush said, "The leadership that's on the Hill now cannot get that job done." Action of the Supreme Court, too, as the justices agree to step into a big Second Amendment fight: who gets to own guns? And the race for president takes no holiday. Mr. Gardner said, "I'm setting January 8th 2008 as the date of the New Hampshire primary." But surprise: the names in the headlines are Obama and Huckabee. Gov. Mike Huckabee (R-AR) said, "I think I'm pretty doggone electable." Covering the stories this holiday week, Martha Raddatz of ABC News, Charles Babington of the Associated Press, Jeff Zeleny of the New York Times and Joan Biskupic of U.S.A. Today.

The Israelis and Palestinians try for peace, while the Democrats and Republicans running for president prepare for war. Tonight on "Washington Week:" can they pull it off? Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert said, "I'm an optimistic person. You can't be a prime minister of Israel if you're not an optimist." Chief Palestinian Negotiator Saeb Erekat said, "Failure is not an option for me now. It's my survival." With the presidential nudge, the Middle East peace process comes to Annapolis, Maryland. President George W. Bush stated, "Achieving this goal is not going to be easy. If it were easy, it would have happened a long time ago." After a seven-year break, the U.S. is back in the middle of the muddle. We offer a reality check. On the campaign trail, the Republicans sharpen their attacks on each other. Mayor Rudy Giuliani said, "Mitt generally criticizes people in a situation in which he's had far the worst record." Gov. Mike Huckabee said, "Mitt's changed his position. He's been all over the board, but my conservatism has been consistent." Gov. Mitt Romney said, "I don't know how many times I can tell it: I was wrong. All right?" And Democrats rally the faithful. Sen. Barack Obama said, "People ask me sometimes "why run now?" Why wait?" Sen. Hillary Clinton said, "Change is just a word, if you don't have the strength and experience to make it happen." Thirty-four days to go until Iowa, but who's counting? Everybody. Covering the week: Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, Gloria Borger of CNN and U.S. News, and Dan Balz of the Washington Post.

At the intersection of the Internet and politics, presidential candidate Ron Paul's supporters are rewriting the rules of political campaigns. NOW explores how the Texas congressman and his supporters are using the Internet to attract voters - and massive campaign contributions - from across the political spectrum. Supporters include anti-war progressives, anti-tax libertarians, civil libertarians, and even some white supremacists. The common theme is anger over where the country is heading. "Ron Paul's campaign is so extraordinary to many of us because even while it was getting massive online traffic, you'd be lucky to get a whisper of his campaign in a lot of media outlets," said Zephyr Teachout, Howard Dean's former online organizer and now a Duke University professor. That anonymity changed when, on November 5, Paul's campaign raised a record-breaking $4.2 million—even though many of his followers have little political activism experience and were acting online without the help of Paul's official campaign. "I think the message should be the only thing that counts, but you can't get the message out without the money," Paul tells NOW. Can viral energy and passion in the virtual world translate into real world votes?

Faith, politics and campaign survival strategies, plus why the intelligence community changed its mind on Iran, tonight on "Washington Week." It's all about the definitions. On the Republican side, one leading candidate tries to define himself. Gov. Mitt Romney (R-MA) said, "If I'm fortunate to become your president, I will serve no one religion, no one group, no one cause, and no one interest." While Democrats try to define each other. "How did running for president become a qualification to be president? Well, this is not a job you can learn about from a book," said Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY). Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "It's silly season. I understand she's been quoting my kindergarten teacher in Indonesia." Sen. John Edwards (D-NC) said, "I think between Obama, Clinton and me it's a dead heat." And at the White House, the president tries to redefine the Iranian nuclear threat. Pres. George W. Bush said, "And so I view this report as a warning signal. They had the program. They halted the program." Sen. Harry Reid (D-NV) said, "President Bush is the only person that I know that could get a report like we received - the National Intelligence Estimate - yesterday on Iran, who says that it's a warning signal." Who's right? Covering the week Michael Duffy of TIME magazine, Michele Norris of National Public Radio, and David Sanger of the New York Times.

A couple steps forward a couple steps back. That's Congress at the end of the year, while with the presidential frontrunners in both parties it's several steps back. Tonight on "Washington Week:" Rep. John Boehner (R-OH) said, "There doesn't appear to be any plan that's been agreed to in terms of how we're going finish this work." Rep. Rahm Emanuel (D-IL) said, "The president's veto is an attempt to continually hold off the future." One side is smug, the other frustrated as Congress stumbles toward a messy finish, squabbling over healthcare, energy, the war, and the budget. How do the Democrats in charge explain it? On the 2008 campaign trail, the topsy-turvy pre-holiday rush continues with regrets. Gov. Mike Huckabee (R-AR) said, "After the debate today I went to Mitt Romney and apologized to him." And Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) quipped, "Hillary, I'm looking forward to you advising me as well." While polls shift in Iowa, New Hampshire, and South Carolina. And the intelligence community is under new fire. Who destroyed controversial videotaped interrogations? Rep. Silvestre Reyes (D-TX) said, "We feel, on a bipartisan level that our committee was not informed." Who did know about it and when? Covering the week: Charles Babington of the Associated Press, John Harris of Politico, John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal, and Tom Gjelten of National Public Radio.

In the midst of the holiday spending and consumption frenzy, Bill Moyers interviews author Benjamin Barber about how capitalism isn't living up to its potential to serve society. "Capitalism is no longer manufacturing goods to meet real needs and human wants," says Barber. "It's manufacturing needs to sell us all the goods it's got to produce." Barber is the author of 17 books including international best-seller Jihad vs. McWorld and Consumed: How Markets Corrupt Children, Infantilize Adults, and Swallow Citizens Whole. Also on the program: is it time to rewrite the Constitution? Moyers gets perspective from the University of Texas Law School's Sanford Levinson, author of Our Undemocratic Constitution: Where the Constitution Goes Wrong (and How We the People Can Correct It). And an update on changes to media regulations voted on this week by the FCC.

The week in review, the year in review tonight on "Washington Week." Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY) said, "I never believe any election is at all predictable, let alone inevitable." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "When I was 20 points down, they all thought I was a wonderful guy, so obviously things have changed." Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) said, "Let me just say something for the record: none of the Democratic candidates asked for my support. John McCain did." Pres. George W. Bush said, "I believe we will keep the White House. I believe ours is the party that understands the nature of the world in which we live and that the government's primary responsibility is to protect the American citizens from harm." Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-KY) said, "Even those of us who disagreed on the war have always agreed on at least one thing, and that is that the troops in the field will not be left without the resources they need." Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-MA) said, "It's wrong to give the president another huge blank check for the war in Iraq. Enough is enough. Enough is enough. Enough." Mitt Romney said, "The more people come to know Mike Huckabee, the more they realize they don't know about Mike Huckabee." Mike Huckabee said, "If we are so politically correct in this country that a person can't say enough of the nonsense of political attack ads, could we pause for a few days to say Merry Christmas to each other, then we're really, really in trouble as a country." And that's just what the nation's newsmakers had to say this week. Tonight we take a look at the last seven days and the last 12 months. Elections, the rocky economy, battles at home and abroad, with Jeanne Cummings of Politico, Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times, and Alexis Simendinger of National Journal, plus the observations of our "Washington Week" panelists on the big stories of 2007.

Can an unlikely collaboration save Idaho's wilderness? A Republican congressman and the Idaho Conservation League have joined forces to protect a vast swath of the state's natural environment. The legislation, the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act (CIEDRA), transfers some public land -- land Americans across the country pay for -- to private local ownership in exchange for protection of nearby wilderness. It also leaves land bordering the wilderness open to further recreational use, especially involving off-road vehicles. That price is too high for some, including singer-songwriter Carole King, who owns a 128-acre ranch in Idaho. NOW talks to residents, ranchers, off-road vehicle fans, and wilderness advocates to unearth the truth behind a tug-of-war that is playing out not just in Idaho, but in other states and the halls of the U.S. Congress.

The Bhutto assassination, and Iowa finally prepares to vote, tonight on "Washington Week." Pres. George Bush said, "Those who committed this crime must be brought to justice." Wajid Hasan said, "She was never scared. I can tell you this much. She was never scared of all these things. She was concerned, no doubt, but she was never scared." Was Benazir Bhutto Pakistan's best chance for peace and democracy? If so, what does her assassination mean for a nuclear-armed Pakistan and its homegrown terrorism networks? The answer touches on the past and the future. As U.S. presidential candidates display their commander in chief credentials, Mayor Rudy Giuliani said, "The Islamic terrorists would make a terrible mistake if they confuse our democracy for weakness." Sen Hillary Clinton (D-NY) said, "On January 20th, 2009, the problems that will await the next president are daunting." And in the race toward Thursday's Iowa caucuses, Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "There's no shortage of anger and bluster and bitter partisanship out there. We don't need more heat. We need more light." But who has the switch? Covering the week, Janine Zacharia of Bloomberg News, John Dickerson of Slate magazine, David Broder of the Washington Post and Karen Tumulty of Time magazine.
